

WILD ANIMAL MADNESS

The wild animal problem affecting Birmingham ARTISTS studios has worsened. Over the course of the last year, studio complexes in the city have been over run by a variety of rampaging beasts. From the crocodile spotted at Fazeley Street Studios, to the army of Raccoons that briefly took over The Works, wild animals have become a major nuisance. Birmingham ARTISTS are now afraid to enter their studios, with the production of artwork suffering as a result.

Raccoons: 'menace'

BRAVE POWERS

Perhaps we should all follow the example set by a certain Peter Powers who risked his life in July when a lion was spotted at Margaret Street. Peter 'The Power' Powers came to the rescue when the dangerous animal entered the ART school canteen. Clearly a violation of health and safety regulations, brave Powers wrested the lion to the ground before depositing it ceremoniously in an RSPCA vehicle parked outside.

PRIVATE DICK

BAZ have taken the necessary step of hiring a private detective to try and get to the bottom of this problem. Although only a week in to the job, it appears our £2000 a week man has already made inroads. These are unsubstantiated claims, but it appears that the animals may be stemming from a Ladywood studio complex where Juneau Projects are based.

According to our man it appears things have gone a little astray in the Juneau's studio.

AMPLIFIER CABLES

When a recent delivery from China of exotic stuffed animals were delivered to the Juneaus HQ a bizarre a mix up with amplifier cables resulted in the container being electrified.

DARK CARDBOARD RECESSES

One by one the cotton wool stuffed animals came back to life and disappeared in to the many dark cardboard recesses and warrens of the Juneau's studio. Since this unfortunate incident, exotic animals have overrun Birmingham ARTISTS studios. It is thought that their numbers are increasing rapidly due mainly to the prevalence of a strain of 'supertomato' rumoured to be grown locally. BAZ aren't reading too much into this at this stage, but we think our man may be on to something. More to follow.
